Kenney sweeps polls to grab Dem nomination

City Hall. Jim Kenney turned heads when he quit City Council to run for mayor in January. Now he's got the nomination.

Former City Councilman Jim Kenney won the Democratic nomination for Mayor of Philadelphia, beating five other opponents with roughly 58 percent of the vote at 9:23 p.m., with 79 percent of precincts reporting.

Because Democrats hold an 8 to 1 voter registration advantage in the city, Kenney's win all but assures he will become mayor after the general election in November.

Kenney was the heavy favorite going into Election Day, but that wasn't always the case.

Former District Attorney Lynne Abraham put out a poll that claimed she was winning. But her candidacy faltered after she fainted during a live televised debate and questions arose over whether, at 74, she was simply too old.

State Sen. Tony Williams too was considered a viable contender, but his lackluster campaign failed to highlight the key issue Williams was identified with: charter schools and school choice. He took 22 percent of the vote.

Kenney had patiently amassed a pile of endorsements from labor leaders and cut into Williams' presumed advantage among African-American voters. He also took advantage of voters' distrust of Williams' financial backers, partners in the securities trading firm Susquehanna International Group, who are strong proponents of educational reform.

Kenney will face GOP candidate Melissa Murray Bailey, 36, in the general election.

In 2014, the election to City Hall of Anthony Hardy Williams, son of Hardy Williams, was seen as a sure thing.

But then in January, Jim Kenney abruptly quit his City Council at-large seat to run for mayor and quickly began racking up nominations from influential groups across the city.

Kenney's announcement that he would quit City Council was covered by almost all Philly media — before he even officially announced a run for mayor.

The launch of his campaign was held in the mayor's reception room in City Hall and was packed with ecstatic, cheering crowds.

Meanwhile, Williams' support for educational reforms became an unbearable hindrance as new Gov. Tom Wolf turned up the heat against charter schools in Philadelphia.

Lynne Abraham came in a distant third with 10 percent of the vote. Candidates Nelson Diaz, Doug Oliver and Milton Street, respectively, trailed with less than five percent each. SAM NEWHOUSE

Voters take voices to polls

Citizens ranged from opinionated to ambivalent on primary day.

"I voted for Jim Kenney because I think he's the most progressive candidate," said Chris Connelly, 32, of the Fairmount area, who works in motion picture production. He cited public schools as a strong concern.

"I think he'd be good for the city," he said. Barbara Jones, 71, of North Philly, said she voted for former DA Lynne Abraham for mayor. "She's one tough cookie, she was a good DA and she'd be good for this city," Jones said.

But other voters said they didn't feel strongly for any candidate.

Kenneth Hudson, 34, of North Philly, said he didn't think any mayoral candidate expressed enough of a focus on community-police relations issues to earn his vote.

"That [policing issues] would have had to have been the main thing," he said. "Like if anybody changed the subject, you change it back. That would have made a difference." SAM NEWHOUSE

Possible plane poo ruins girl's party

This one gives new meaning to the phrase 'party pooper.'

A local girl's Sweet 16 party was ruined after feces — apparently from an airplane — fell from the sky Sunday in Levittown, Bucks County, according to FOX 29.

The soiled party tent / COURTESY OF FOX 29

"Out of nowhere, from the sky, comes a bunch of feces [and] lands on her," Joe Cambray, father of birthday girl Jacinda, told FOX 29.

The fecal bomb landed on a canopy that Joe had bought to protect the party from rain. Luckily (I guess?), the cake had already been moved inside.

The station reports that Joe's sister used a smartphone app to figure out that five planes were in the area at the time of the plop.

It's not clear that the waste actually came from a plane, but there are periodic reports of so-called blue ice. DAN KELLEY

Lawsuit. Conductor injured in derailment sues Amtrak

A conductor critically injured in last week's deadly train derailment in Philadelphia has sued Amtrak, accusing the publicly funded passenger rail company of negligence, his lawyer said on Tuesday, adding to a string of lawsuits since the crash.

Emilio Fonseca, 33, was taking a restroom break in the first car during his work shift when the passenger train went off the rails, attorney Bruce Nagel told a news conference, saying the train suddenly surged forward and then crashed.

Fonseca, who is married and lives in Kearney, New Jersey, suffered a broken neck, back and both shoulders, and was believed to be the most severely injured Amtrak employee, Nagel said. He is among five people still in critical condition and is expected to remain hospitalized for several weeks.

Eight people died and more than 200 others were injured.

Unknown cause

The reason the train accelerated from 70 miles per hour to 106 mph in the minute before the crash remains a mystery.

Authorities have not ruled out equipment malfunction, human error or other possible reasons for the train gaining speed so rapidly.

Fonseca is the second employee of the passenger rail line to sue over the May 12 crash, filing the action in state court in Newark, New Jersey, claiming negligence and asking for unspecified damages, his lawyer said.

Other lawsuits have been filed by an Amtrak employee who was riding as a passenger and by four passengers.

"There was a sudden surge and then the wreck occurred," Nagel said his client told him.

Five things you need to know

1 Texas police seek motorcycle gang truce

Texas police asked rival motorcycle gangs on Tuesday to put aside their differences after a weekend brawl at a Waco restaurant that left nine people dead and 18 injured, calling for a halt to the carnage and threats of revenge attacks.

"There has been enough tragedy, and there has been enough bloodshed in Waco, Texas. We would appreciate there not being any more," police Sgt. Patrick Swanton told a news briefing.

He added that threats for reprisal against police from motorcycle gangs have "toned down" but are still a worry for law enforcement officials, who arrested 170 people following Sunday's brawl at the Twin Peaks Sports Bar and Grill in the central Texas city.

Of the 18 injured, seven remain in the hospital, and all are in stable condition. Few of those involved in the deadly brawl are from the Waco area, Swanton said.

The nine killed ranged in age from 27 to 65, and a preliminary autopsy report indicates they all died from gunshot wounds, the justice of the peace in Waco said, TV broadcaster NBCDFW reported.

Those arrested were being held on bail of $1 million each in separate parts of a county jail to prevent an outbreak of violence, county officials said. REUTERS

2 US charges six Chinese nationals with economic espionage

The U.S. government charged six Chinese nationals with economic espionage, saying they stole secrets from two companies that develop technology often used in military systems.

It was the third time in as many years that U.S. authorities have made accusations of economic espionage conducted on behalf of China, a sign that the United States is increasingly focused on what it has termed a top national security concern.

State Department spokesman Jeff Rathke told reporters that the U.S. is committed to protecting companies' trade secrets. REUTERS

3 Takata doubling recall for defective air bags to 34M vehicles

Japanese air bag manufacturer Takata Corp. is doubling a recall of air bags to nearly 34 million vehicles, creating the largest automotive recall in American history.

The recall, which still does not identify the cause of the problem, involves passenger- and driver-side air bags in vehicles made by 11 automakers, the U.S. Department of Transportation, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and Takata said. It expands on the 16.6 million vehicles called back for repairs for the same issue in previous regional and national recalls. REUTERS

4 Bodies of Germanwings victims can be sent home

The bodies of the victims of the Germanwings crash in southern France in March have all been identified and can be sent home to their families, the Marseille prosecutor said.

"The 150 death certificates have been signed, as well as the permits for burial," the statement said.

The prosecutor said that officials of German airline Lufthansa have received multilingual documents that will allow the bodies to be repatriated. REUTERS

5 Airbnb faces setback as San Francisco may limit stays

San Francisco may become the second California city in a month to limit the length of stays arranged by accommodation services like Airbnb, which matches people wishing to rent out all or part of their homes to temporary guests.

A city committee on Monday advanced a proposal that would limit hosts to renting accommodations for less than 60 days per year, down from 90 currently. Airbnb has grown quickly and is valued at more than $10 billion, with analysts assuming it can overcome any major regulatory backlash. REUTERS

'Carries graduation

Performance art.
A sexual assault activist kept good on a vow she made earlier this year.

Emma Sulkowicz carried her mattress across the stage at Columbia College's Class Day on Tuesday — apparently against the wishes of Columbia University.

Sulkowicz began carrying her dorm room mattress around campus when the school year began as part of her senior thesis, a performance art piece called "Mattress Performance (Carry That Weight)," meant to address the administration's handling of her alleged rape.

She accused student Paul Nungesser, who also graduated Tuesday, of rape in 2012. Nungesser was later cleared of assault, and earlier this year filed a lawsuit against the university, claiming it permanently damaged his reputation.

Columbia found Nungesser "not responsible" for the alleged rape charges, and his name was not made public until Sulkowicz filed a police report in May 2014. The New York district attorney declined to charge him with a crime, citing a lack of reasonable suspicion.

Teo Armus, deputy news editor at the Columbia Spectator, said on Twitter during the ceremony that Sulkowicz did not shake Columbia President Lee Bollinger's hand. Armus also tweeted out photos of Nungesser attending the ceremony in cap and gown.

Zoe Ridolfi-Starr was one of four women who helped Sulkowicz carry her mattress on Tuesday.

"It was extremely meaningful. It means a lot to people beyond Emma and myself, and all the other survivors in the audience," Ridolfi-Starr told Metro in a phone call after the ceremony. "This really represented a burden we have faced, and to be successful in spite of all that, for our peers and families to stand up, was really meaningful."

Ridolfi-Starr said hundreds of students put red tape on their hats in solidarity of the movement to end campus sexual assault.

"The administration tried to discourage us from doing it, and has been alienating for the last several years of my life," Ridolfi-Starr said of the administration. "She [Emma] was clear the whole time this was part of her plan, what she had to do confines of her piece."

Ridolfi-Starr, who is the lead complainant in a Title IX discrimination complaint against the university and who started a support group for survivors of sexual assault, previously told Metro she was sexually assaulted during her freshman year at the university.

Sulkowicz's piece inspired similar movements on college campuses across the country. In October, students at Columbia and an additional 130 groups around the world held a National Day of Action for "Carry That Weight Together," and Sulkowicz attended the State of the Union address with Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY).

Since she started carrying her mattress, SUNY schools have adopted a sexual assault policy that requires both parties to verbally give consent, and Gov. Andrew Cuomo has embarked on a campaign to bring the policy to all state schools.

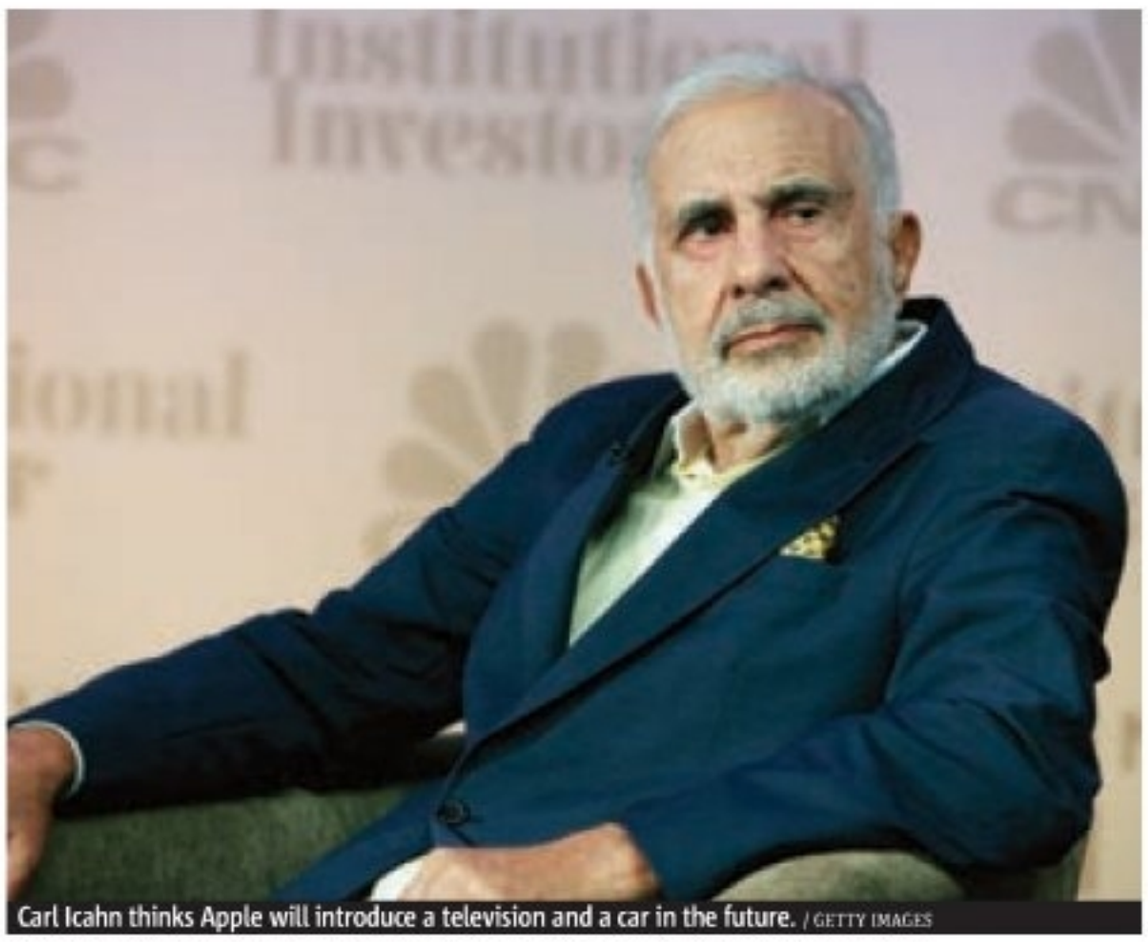
CNBC: Carl Icahn says Apple will still introduce TV, car



Carl Icahn thinks Apple will introduce a television and a car in the future. / GETTY IMAGES

Stock. Carl Icahn owned about 53 million Apple shares at the end of the first quarter.

Billionaire activist investor Carl Icahn and Brett Icahn, his son and portfolio manager, on Tuesday stuck to their views that Apple Inc. would introduce a television set and a car.

The elder Icahn, in an interview with cable business channel CNBC, also said his disagreement with the technology giant was over the company not doing bigger share buybacks.

"I believe they will do a TV," Icahn said, added that "the one thing that I disagree with the company on is not buying a great deal more stock."

Brett Icahn said, "We believe they're going to do a car."

In an open letter to Apple Chief Executive Officer Tim Cook on his website on Monday, Icahn said Apple should be trading at $240, nearly double its current price, and he believed the company was poised to enter the television market by 2016 and the automobile market by 2020.

The Wall Street Journal, citing sources familiar with the matter, reported Monday that Apple had scrapped plans to introduce an ultra-high-definition television set more than a year ago.

Icahn portfolio manager David Schechter said, "It is dangerous to assume that they're not going to introduce new products in new categories in the future." REUTERS

Apple buybacks and Icahn

Icahn, who has pushed Apple to boost buybacks since announcing his stake in the company in August 2013, said his prodding had helped the company. Apple boosted its repurchase program in April to $140 billion from the $90 billion announced last year.

"I think I helped the company. I think I did, and I think few could deny that some of my influence, maybe some, helped them to buy more stock, and that's all I'm trying to do again," Icahn said. REUTERS

Ways couples blow their wedding budget

Tips. Here's how to not become part of the 25 percent of couples who go over budget planning their special day.

Keeping your spending in check isn't always an easy task. But according to Jessica Lehry Bishop, founder and editor of The Budget Savvy Bride, it can be done. Below are four things that'll almost certainly blow your wedding budget.

1 Being careless with your guest list

The biggest factor impacting your budget is far and away your guest list.

"For every guest, that's another place setting, another meal, another chair," says Bishop. "It's exponential for every guest that you add to your list, so it's really about reining it in and only inviting the people who are most important."

If this means putting your foot down and telling your mom she can't invite her neighbor to your big day, so be it.

2 Insisting on a designer dress

Let's face it — every bride wants to feel like the belle of the ball on her wedding day. But are you prepared to drop more cash than you're really able on a high-end dress? Bishop says it's one of the most common ways that brides bust their budgets.

"If you do have your sights set on a certain designer dress, sites like PreOwnedWeddingDresses.com or Nearly Newlywed both have really great designer dresses that you can get for less," she adds.

You can still have your dream wedding without going broke. / ISTOCK

3 Forgetting about invitation-related costs

Most couples do indeed factor invitations into their wedding budgets. But are you keeping all the details in mind? Bishop points out that certain invitation styles are heavier than others, which requires more than just a regular postage stamp. Weights aside, square-shaped invites also cost more to ship than traditional ones.

"And there's not only the invitation that you're sending out; the RSVP card requires another stamp," says Bishop. "That's something a lot of people forget about."

4 Overlooking alternative venues

If you're pushing your budget to its limits, reducing your venue costs can be a game changer. Bishop recommends finding a low-cost or no-cost alternative to traditional event halls, which can be pricey. The home of a family member or friend can make for a romantic option, as can an outdoor setting like a nearby beach or park.

Wherever you decide to hold your wedding, chances are that you'll be decorating. When it comes to flowers, it pays to do your homework.

"One of the best ways to keep your costs down is to choose flowers that are in season because they're more readily available, they're cheaper, and you won't have to fly in exotic flowers from another part of the country," shares Bishop.

1 Sofia Vergara reconsiders the baby question

Sofia Vergara apparently has a different take on the parenting question with fiancé Joe Manganiello for each magazine she talks to. She's now on the cover of Redbook and saying the baby issue will have to be addressed sooner rather than later, so forget any of her previous statements about it not being a priority. "Joe is younger than me. He's 38. He's never had kids. How am I going to say no?" she tells the magazine. "I tell him, 'If we're going to do this, we have to do it, like, now because I don't want to be 50 with a baby.'" Seems reasonable.

Also of note — Vergara is still amazed at how good everything is going with Manganiello. "I finally realized that relationships don't need to be so much work. Ever since we met, it's been so easy," she says. "I'm very suspicious. I'm like, 'It's not normal that we've been together for nine months, and we haven't had a big fight or anything.'" But not suspicious enough to reconsider that walk down the aisle, apparently.

2 Emily Blunt slams Cannes' 'no flats' policy

When Emily Blunt was informed about that report of Cannes Film Festival attendees being turned away from a gala premiere because they violated the fest's rumored policy of women only being able to wear high heels on the red carpet, she was not pleased. "That's very disappointing. To think there are these waves of equality and waves of people discovering that women are so fascinating and interesting to watch and bankable," she said at the news conference for "Sicario," her Cannes entry. "Everyone should wear flats, to be honest. We shouldn't be wearing high heels anyway. That's my point of view. I just prefer wearing Converse sneakers." You and me both, Em.

3 A tribute befitting a dearly departed ... blowfish?

MILEY CYRUS, FACEBOOK

So apparently the backyard sessions for Miley Cyrus' Happy Hippie Foundation aren't just going to be epic team-ups with rock greats. She's also using the platform to express her grief. Over her dead blowfish Pablow. No, seriously. Cyrus' latest video clip features her donning a unicorn onesie and settling in behind a keyboard to sing her moving tribute to mark Pablow's passing. "How can I love someone I never touched? You lived under the water, but I love you so much," Miley sings. "You've never been on land, and you've never seen the sky. You don't know what a cloud is. Why does everything I love have to die?" It's so bizarrely moving that I feel the need to remind you about the unicorn onesie part.

THE KING OF JEANS SIGN GETS A MAKEOVER

HUGHE DILLON

Sad news from Philly's nightclub scene: Club owner and manager Clark Maloney passed away Friday due to complications from a kidney transplant. Maloney ran 1925 Lounge on 17th Street (once known as G Lounge) and CODA (formerly Whisper) and long-closed clubs Xero, Shampoo and Rock Lobster. "I'm devastated," says internationally known, Philly-based DJ King Britt.

Iconic signs in South Philly are big in May. While indie rock fans of Broad Street's Boot & Saddle wait for its legendary neon "boot" to return from Len Davidson's repair shop, the now-razed King of Jeans property on East Passyunk Avenue has a new (fake) sign on the fence in front of the vacant space announcing "Queen of Jeans Coming Summer 2015" — this time with a woman wearing the pants. Local artists South Fellini and Kid Hazo created it.

Nick Berardi, owner of Rittenhouse's Richard Nicholas Hair Studio and the Scissorcandy website, is opening a new barbershop on the same block (17th and Sansom), Nic Grooming, with his sons Joseph and Nicky Berardi.

Last week's Non-Comm radio convention at World Cafe Live had as much drama outside the building as it did inside the club. While Best Coast vocalist Bethany Cosentino was spied singing karaoke at 12 Steps Down in the Italian Market, Ryan Adams made himself look foolish by not performing with his folkie girlfriend Natalie Prass at World Cafe Live. Word has it Adams refused to play because people wouldn't put away their cellphone cameras.

- "Real Housewives of Atlanta"'s NeNe Leakes and husband Gregg got a tour of the Pier Shops at Caesars in Atlantic City from its new owner, developer Bart Blatstein, on Saturday.
- Harry Connick Jr. sang "It Had to Be You" at Perelman School of Medicine's 250th birthday party at the Philadelphia Museum of Art on Saturday with billionaire Ray Perelman, NBC News' Andrea Mitchell and Mayor Michael Nutter in attendance.
- Wynnewood-born rocker Joan Jett hung out with Wells Fargo Center security staff before her gig opening for The Who on Sunday.

The flip side of 'Hamlet'

Post-modern.
The Wilma puts on Tom Stoppard's comedic take on Shakespeare's classic.

"Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead" opens in previews at the Wilma Theater (265 S. Broad St., WilmaTheater.org) tonight and runs through June 14. / ALEXANDER IZILIAEV

The Wilma Theater's production of "Hamlet" closed earlier this month, but that didn't quite bring the curtain down on the Prince of Denmark. When it rises again, the title character of Shakespeare's masterpiece will be relegated to the background, and two minor characters will take the lead for Tom Stoppard's post-modern comedy "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead."

In the Bard's telling of the story, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are childhood friends of Hamlet's enlisted to betray the prince. Stoppard's play, which premiered in 1966, takes its title from a line in the final scene of Shakespeare's play which spelled out the duo's offstage fate. While scenes from "Hamlet" recur throughout "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern," most of Stoppard's play concerns the confusion and uncertainty experienced by the two characters as those machinations happen around them.

Wilma artistic director Blanka Zizka's decision to stage the two plays back-to-back provides a rare opportunity for the cast (many returning from "Hamlet") to explore the same characters over the course of two very different plays.

"In theater, you have essentially four weeks to figure this person out," says Keith J. Conallen, who plays Rosencrantz in both shows. "We're getting so much more time to truly investigate how these people tick. We're going much deeper than a surface-level psychology; we're going down to the marrow."

SHAUN BRADY
letters@metro.us

Who's who

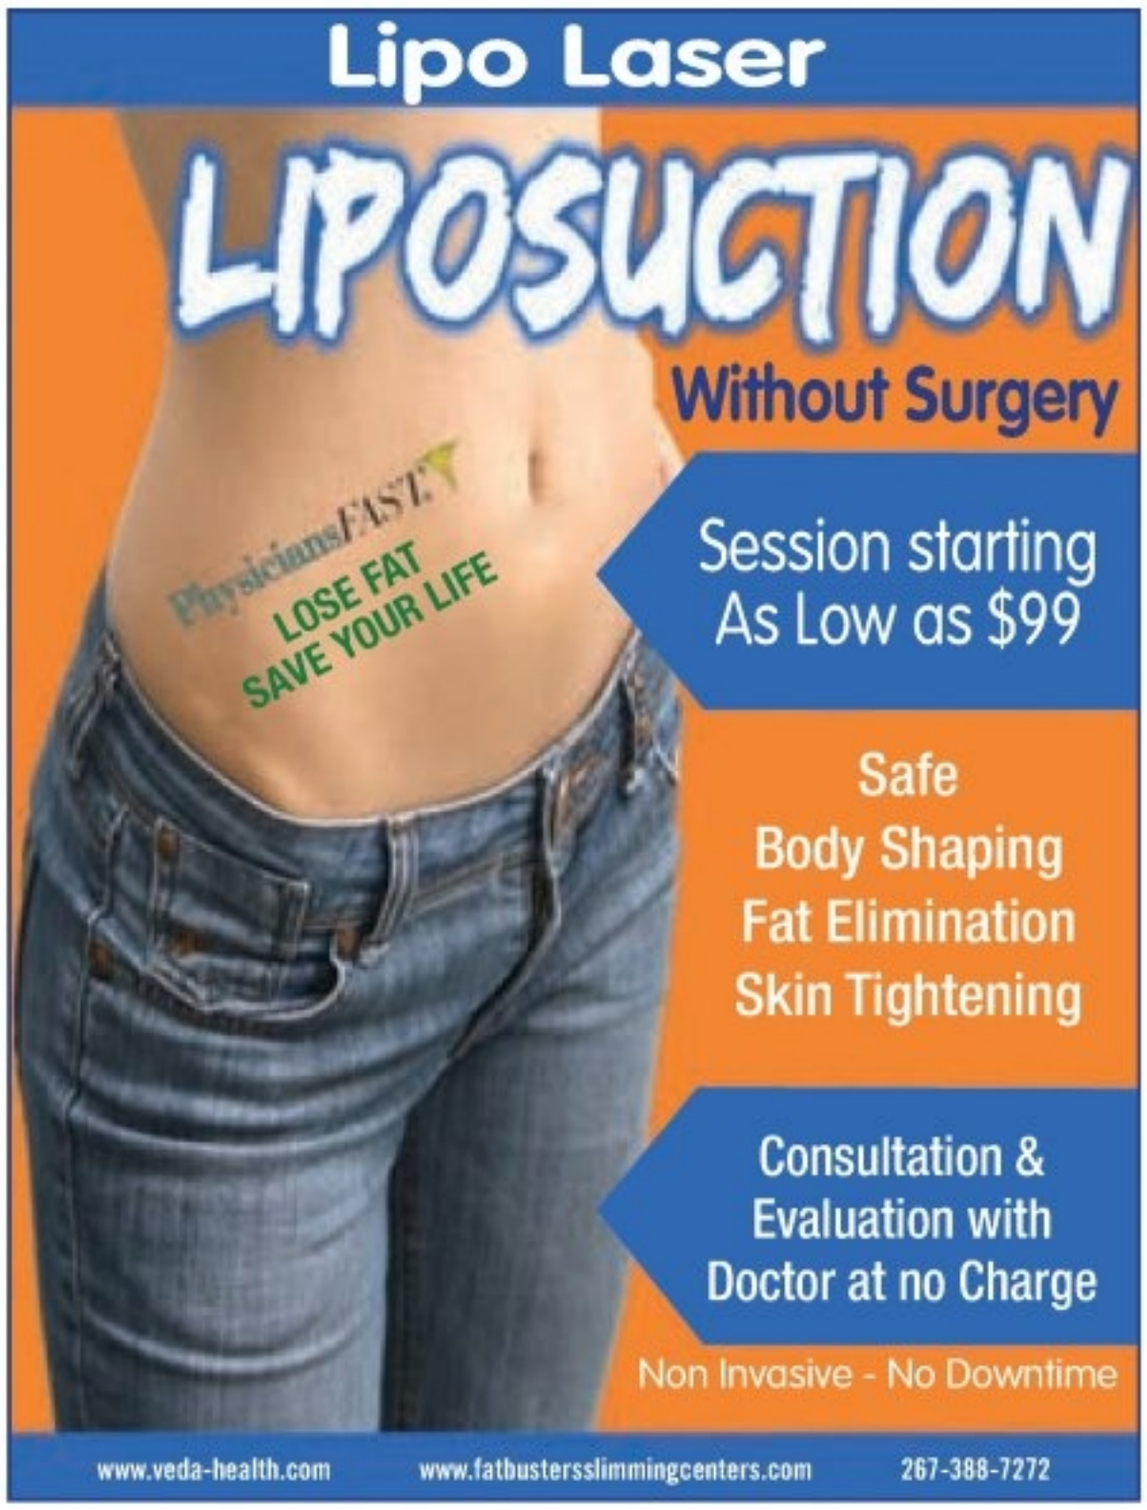
Casting

Retaining the same cast for both shows (aside from Zainab Jah, who won't be returning as Hamlet) is part of Zizka's ongoing attempt to create a resident company of actors trained in the Wilma's physical, vocal and emotional approach.

The actors worked with vocal teacher Jean-René Toussaint and attended workshops with Theodoros Terzopoulos of the Attis Theatre in Greece, who will direct next season's "Antigone."

Conallen, together with actors Jered McLenigan (Guildenstren) and Ed Swidey (First Player), also engaged in a two-week rehearsal for "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead" prior to rehearsals for "Hamlet," allowing them to develop the characters with both plays in mind.

"They're very different worlds and are different characters," Conallen says, "but we found little hints that we could give the audiences of 'Hamlet' to intrigue them into what they could expect from 'R and G Are Dead.' It's fun and interesting to see these two grown men dealing with their frustration and confusion and boredom in a comical way."



5 Guests we'll miss on Letterman

Late night. Before tomorrow's final "Late Show," we look at some of Dave's best relationships with his regular guests.

1. Tom Hanks

Hanks has been appearing on the show since the very beginning of his career. For the Hanks completist, footage of the actor goofing off about the "Splash" premiere can be found on YouTube. While Tom Hanks seems like someone who could make friendly, engaging conversation with even the most awkward of interviewers, his years of easygoing chats with Letterman offer a timeline to the development of his persona as Hollywood's favorite nice guy.

JEFFREY R. STAAB, CBS

2. Jack Hanna

JEFFREY R. STAAB, CBS

Letterman, like many late night hosts, has been vocal about his admiration for Johnny Carson. It's not that surprising, then, that he continued one of Carson's traditions: inviting on an expert to learn about wild animals. Jack Hanna appeared many times over the years, bringing everything from cheetahs to camels to the "Late Show" to show off to a delighted audience.

3. Amy Sedaris

PAUL FILO, CBS

Sedaris is in some ways an ideal "Late Show" guest. She may not always have the trendiest project to promote but that only means her appearances are more geared toward her own special brand of Amy Sedaris-ness. Conversations go in unexpected directions, she's full of advice, and sometimes she even has a craft project (even Fallon lets her do her own projects instead of playing games sometimes). Letterman had her on repeatedly over the years, recognizing that, for most people, watching her talk for 10 minutes is entertainment enough.

4. Julia Roberts

As we learned last week, Julia Roberts has been a guest on Letterman's show over two dozen times. And just in case you're thinking, well, of course, she must have appeared for her breakthrough role in "Pretty Woman," you'd be wrong. Her time on his show dates all the way back to "Mystic Pizza." And we have to give Roberts some kudos: In her final appearance, she called him out for being condescending to young actresses. And to Letterman's credit, as well, he seemed honestly apologetic for his behavior. Only someone he had a solid bond with could provoke that kind of self-reflection.

JEFFREY R. STAAB, CBS

5. Oprah Winfrey

JEFFREY R. STAAB, CBS

If nothing else, Oprah's appearance during Letterman's final run of shows demonstrates how much the man has changed over the years. The duo had a long-standing feud for years, during which Winfrey refused to appear on his show (based, possibly, on him pranking her with a dinner bill), and Letterman razzed her about it. But a thaw began a few years ago when the two appeared in a Super Bowl commercial together, and in recent years, they're starting to seem downright chummy. If two of the biggest stars out there can set aside their differences, there's hope for us all, isn't there?

Gaspard Ulliel hits the runway

Gaspard Ulliel plays the fashion designer as someone who rarely wanders outside his comfort zone in "Saint Laurent," in theaters Friday. / SONY PICTURES CLASSICS

Interview. The French actor/model stars in "Saint Laurent," the wilder movie about the fashion god.

There are two recent films about Yves Saint Laurent. There's last year's "Yves Saint Laurent," a traditional biopic. And there's the new "Saint Laurent," a more experimental and wilder take. In the latter, he's played by Gaspard Ulliel, himself a model and an actor known for playing the lead in "Hannibal Rising" and as the former face of Bleu de Chanel.

Where "Yves Saint Laurent" had easy access to his archives, "Saint Laurent" did not. How did you approach playing him without an avalanche of materials?
Very early on, Bertrand [Bonello, the director] told me that he chose me because he was also interested in filming me. The idea was to be 50 percent myself, 50 percent my character. I quickly understood it was not about only doing a lot of research, gathering information and trying to get as close as possible to reality. In fact, it was kind of the opposite. At one point, I felt buried under all those facts and details. That's when I decided to step back from reality and clear some space to fantasize about my character, reinvent him in a way.

GETTY IMAGES

That's when it became interesting. I had to dig inside myself and my own memories, my own perceptions, to make this character come alive. As soon as you start imitating you realize it just blocks and stifles the emotion.

Did you actually get to talk to his longtime business and life partner, Pierre Berge?
He was supporting the other film, so no. My first reflex was to try and meet people who were very intimate with Yves then I realized that now all those people are still very close to Pierre Berge. So it was not possible to meet those people. At first I thought it was unfair, but now I think it was for the best. When you're talking about such an iconic figure, you'll have so many different points of view on him. In the end, [not talking to anyone] allowed me to keep my own objectivity on him.

The two films wound up

One more thing

This film seems very influenced by older European films, like by Luchino Visconti.

Bertrand actually followed in the footsteps of Visconti in a certain way, in certain themes: the end of a world, the end of an era. It's like we're talking about the last giants of fashion. And the way he shuffles time, plays with the chronology, is very Proustian. Proust was a very important obsession for Yves Saint Laurent. Even in the end, when [Bonello] shows his last show, he's using the style of Mondrian's paintings to create the image, filling it with split screens. It's another homage to one of Yves' influences. He was celebrating all those influences in a perfect assertion that the creative life only exists in constant dialogue with other arts.

very, very different.
I think ["Yves Saint Laurent" is] what you would expect of a biopic. It's a bit more classical than ours. For me, this film never felt like a biopic. It's an odyssey into the mind of an artist. It's not just about Yves Saint Laurent and his life and career. It's a film about art and creation. You can watch it without knowing a lot of things about Yves.

Modern design meets eco-friendly construction

Chad Ludeman of Postgreen Homes doesn't see why small projects can't be sustainable, too.

ALEX MARCUS
@ MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Most of the time when we hear about the marriage of modern design and sustainable construction, it's heralding a large new office building or apartment tower. But Chad Ludeman of Postgreen Homes is intent on bringing those elements to rowhouse living.

Take the facade of Postgreen's latest project, Duplexcellence II, made of sturdy steel with energy-saving cooktops, LED lights and double-the-industry-standard insulation. Even consumers who aren't excited about green construction are thrilled to see how much lower their utility bills are. Ludeman says, "We're building quite a different product than everyone else."

Ludeman founded the company in 2008 after jobs in engineering and marketing, and it's been steadily growing since, and he puts effort toward growing Postgreen's name recognition. "For most developers, each project is a new brand," he says, "and nobody really knows who's behind it. But being really open and transparent about who we are and what we're about has been a goal since day one."

Today he works with his wife, a childhood friend and a construction team. "We don't need to be the biggest, richest developers out there," he says. "We want to do something that we are proud to put our name on."

The latest project: Duplexcellence II

Postgreen has a few projects in the works right now, but Ludeman is most excited about Duplexcellence II, now almost complete, near the El's Girard stop.

A follow-up to a similar project across the street, it contains four duplex units stacked two by two. The bottom units have gardens, and the top ones sport roof decks, all behind that surprisingly sexy reclaimed-wood facade.

A particular point of pride for Ludeman is how economically the design uses space, allowing more families to live on the lot than would in a more traditional townhome.

Also in the works is Awesometown in Fishtown: Fourteen modern townhomes, four of which are designated for moderate-income families through a partnership with New Kensington Community Development Corporation (NKCDC) and Ludeman's willingness to spare some profits to deliver affordable housing to qualified buyers.

The garbage can you need

The GeniCan scans your empty food packaging to create a fresh grocery list.

DMITRY BELYAEV, MWN
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

The GeniCan will create your grocery list. PROVIDED

We have smartphones, smartwatches — and now, behold, smart garbage cans. The GeniCan prototype is a device that attaches to the inside of your garbage can and scans your discarded food packaging to compile your next shopping list straight to an app. The gadget even sorts your grocery list aisle-by-aisle before you get to the store. Currently seeking funding on website Indiegogo, inventor Rob Griffin plans to have the product ready for shipping in September. We spoke with the Connecticut native on why chucking out trash requires intelligence.

How does it work?
The GeniCan uses a barcode scanner, a microphone and other sensors to find out when an empty food item is discarded into the garbage or recycling bin. It then connects via Wi-Fi to our cloud service and stores the data of the items for viewing on a smartphone app.

Why is the GeniCan better than the traditional pen-and-paper shopping lists?
Items can be added without touching a pen, phone or keyboard in a few seconds. The GeniCan would also appeal because it'll make the entire shopping experience efficient. It sorts your grocery list aisle-by-aisle, matches coupons to the items on your list and has the ability to skip the store altogether by using automatic delivery services like Amazon.

Why is there a microphone?
It allows the user to add items to their grocery list app by just talking to the trash can. Simply hold the item in front of GeniCan's sensor and it will ask, "What may I add to your list?" The user's answer is translated to text and added to the grocery list app.

It sounds like the GeniCan will do a lot more than collect trash. Does it even take it out?
No, but it can tell the responsible person of the household that the garbage is full. We also have commercial plans to offer GeniCan in many service businesses where inventory for items could be made easier, like nail salons, hair salons and others.

Horoscope

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21
Cancel personal plans in order to complete any responsibilities you've left unfinished.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20
Someone will use flattery to goad you into assisting with a business enterprise. Get the facts first, or you could end up in a vulnerable position.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22
You will feel burdened by the demands being put on you. Don't complain. Do what you can without compromising your responsibilities.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22
You will be the person everyone turns to for advice. Your life experience will provide useful knowledge for a youngster in your circle.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22
A forgotten promise will cause a rift in a friendship. You will have to pick up the slack if your peers aren't pulling their weight.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22
An unusual social gathering will prove to be a starting point for a promising partnership. A romantic relationship may become strained if you spend too much time apart.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will have to make revisions to some personal paperwork. A fast talker will try to swindle you into making a financial commitment.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21 Simplify your life by making a point to stop trying to please everyone else. No matter what course you take, there will always be someone who objects.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Don't ignore minor aches and pains. Physical issues will escalate if you aren't practical regarding your lifestyle.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Love is on the rise. Be attentive but not possessive. If you are single, attend a social event to meet someone.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20
Someone close to you will let you down. Don't dwell on disappointment.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20
Dust off your sense of adventure. Trying a new activity will introduce you to new people and experiences. EUGENIA LAST

Letters to the editor

Embarrassing?

A letter writer described the Boston Marathon bombing as "embarrassing." However, I can't understand who is embarrassed. I understand Amtrak is embarrassed about last week's crash, but any fair-minded person knows that the conductor did not intend to crash, the embarrassment comes from the speed the train was going. But Dzhokhar Tsarnaev intended to kill many more people than he did. The bombers placed small improvised explosives in their backpacks and dropped them in a crowd. They then killed an MIT police officer in cold blood and were planning to go to NYC to kill more. The only possible embarrassment I see is the bombers only killing a few people with two bombs in a crowd of thousands; no embarrassment for law enforcement or Boston city officials who handled the days-long manhunt. The press rushing to judgment (with identifying the wrong suspects) is hardly a reason to consider in deciding the fate of the bomber. As for the historical straw men (Oklahoma bombing, WTC in '93), there isn't enough space to point all the errors in those statements. Bottom line: Tsarnaev killed innocent civilians he never met, not out of rage or an incident, but in service to his religion, Islam. He needs to die. KEVIN METZ

Deflategate latest

Pats won't fight

Despite a heated back and forth battle between himself and Roger Goodell, Patriots owner Robert Kraft elected not to appeal the $1 million fine and two draft picks the team was penalized for its part in Deflategate. Tom Brady is still planning to appeal his four-game suspension.

76ers get third pick again, will likely target a guard

NBA draft. The 76ers had the third worst record in 2014-15 and were given the third overall pick.

For the second time in as many draft lotteries, the 76ers will pick third overall. Their name was read just before the top two choices, the Lakers and Timberwolves were announced Tuesday night.

Though they did have an adequate shot at a top two selection, the third spot is perfect for the team's needs, as the top two prospects are both big men (Karl-Anthony Towns, Jalil Okafor) expected to go in the top two, leaving a guard for Philly, just the position the team desperately needs.

The team will likely be able to pick between D'Angelo Russell (Ohio State) and Emmanuel Mudiay (played pro ball in China) while avoiding a third big man with top prospects Nerlens Noel and Joel Embiid already on the roster.

Nerlens Noel was hoping to provide the 76ers luck at the lottery Tuesday night. / GETTY IMAGES

Prior to the lottery, the 76ers held a miniscule, but still possible .28 percent change of getting three top 11 picks, but they will wait on their Lakers and Heat first rounders until at least next year.

Knicks fans are certainly not pleased after the draft order was formally announced. They were awarded the fourth pick despite having the second-best chance at drafting first overall.

The NBA draft kicks off on June 25th.

The draft order

1. Minnesota Timberwolves
2. Los Angeles Lakers
3. Philadelphia 76ers
4. New York Knicks
5. Orlando Magic
6. Sacramento Kings
7. Denver Nuggets
8. Detroit Pistons

Union fans, Sons of Ben are fed up with Union ownership

MLS. The Union have been underachieving on the pitch, and many are blaming the team's front office.

The Union have not made the playoffs in three seasons and fans are getting irate. / GETTY IMAGES

The Union's (2-7-3) 1-0 win over D.C. United (6-2-3) in stoppage time on Sunday was an afterthought to fans, especially the team's most loyal group of supporters — the Sons of Ben.

The supporters organized a protest prior to the start of the match to voice their displeasure with team ownership, parading around the stadium with a banner which read: "Union Fans Deserve Better."

Tim Sosar, public relations director for the Sons of Ben, has been fielding messages all season from angry members looking for answers. The team hasn't reached the playoffs since 2011 and has only won just three matches since September of last season or five months of MLS league play.

"We're not exactly sure of the goal of the ownership," Sosar said. "Is this a hobby for them? Is this a way for them to gain extra revenue? What can we expect out of them moving forward? Are they just trying to pay the bills or are they trying to build a franchise? These are the questions that are on a lot of people's minds."

In response to the protest, Union CEO Nick Sakiewicz issued a statement to the Sons of Ben which read: "We agree wholeheartedly with the Sons of Ben and we share the frustrations of all fans to the start of the season."

Sosar and the majority of Sons of Ben supporters accepted the statement, but a letter which was sent to fans Monday and was later expanded upon didn't receive quite the same reception.

"In the letter he says, 'Now is not the time to point fingers,' but at the same time he is the CEO and the face of the front office," Sosar said. "It kind of sounds like he's avoiding what got us to this point, and it's disconcerting. We've been told for the better part of six years that the team is there for the fans and the commitment of bringing a winning team here, but as a team we've really just been treading water in the bottom third of the standings."

One key move which has been criticized immensely by the fan base was the signing of goalie Rais M'Bolhi last season. M'Bolhi, signed for three-years, $403,000 last July, has severely limited the team's cap space since. After going 1-4-4 since his signing, the Union decided to move on from M'Bolhi earlier this month, while paying out the final amount of his salary.

"Instead of signing a quality left back, which the team has not had in several years, the team signed M'Bolhi and you wonder who was involved in that decision-making effort," Sosar said. "Have they learned anything from it and where do they go next? Should we as fans have any faith in the people making decisions like that?"

Until changes are made, Sosar and the Sons of Ben will not rest. They're tired of the same messages from ownership and outcomes on the field. Sunday was the start of something which will continue to grow louder.

"What we strove to do Sunday was to send a message and make a spectacle of it, but to do it respectfully and in an organized manner," Sosar said. "We got a lot of response from that and now we need to see actions taken. This could take a little while, but now our message is clear. This is groundbreaking for us. No Sons of Ben leadership board has ever gone this far. We're treading in uncharted waters and we're not going to let up."

Ownership mistakes

Sosar was critical of Union ownership, to say the least:

- "The Union had to get away from the salary cap issue that hampered them in 2013, and it didn't work out, so they fired [John] Hackworth. Jim Curtin came in and was a likeable guy from Philly, he had a good reputation and he was turning things around on an interim basis up to that point, so he was hired. Do I think that he's been dealt a bad hand? To a certain degree, yes. He has to deal with a team with a lot of injuries, that's limited in depth and that doesn't have the financial flexibility to bring many experienced players in."

Five teams, five rookie coaches

It seems shocking, but it's true. All five of Philly's major sports teams are now led by head coaches with their first gigs at the pro level. JEFF SMYTH

Chip Kelly, Eagles

Considered for his egomaniac attitude and his fast-paced offense, Kelly succeeded Reid in January 2013, a week after announcing he would stay at Oregon. Kelly's offense took flight in his first season.

Finishing second in yards and tallying the fourth most drives in the league, Kelly's new and improved Eagles finished first in the NFC East, establishing the first year under Kelly as a huge success. The Birds did not make the playoffs in Kelly's sophomore year behind an injury-plagued offensive line and an inadequate defensive backfield (though they did post a 10-6 record).

In January of this year, Jeffrey Lurie gave Kelly full control of all player personnel decisions. Since then, Kelly has made use of his new powers, most notably swapping Nick Foles for the brittle former No. 1 pick, Sam Bradford.

CHIP KELLY

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Brett Brown, 76ers

Under the legendary Gregg Poppovich, who's won four NBA championships, Brown left the Spurs to become head coach of the Sixers in August 2013.

Labeled as "tankers," the 76ers lost a record-tying 26 games in a row last season. Now after an 18-64 campaign, for the second year in a row the Sixers should land another top-five pick.

With outstanding play from Rookie of the Year and former Sixer Michael Carter-Williams along with an impressive first year out of Nerlens Noel, it seems Brown has the mindset and tools to not only produce young players but to be a successful head coach.

Ryne Sandberg, Phillies

After serving as Lehigh Valley IronPigs manager, leading to interim manager for Charlie Manuel, Sandberg was named the 52nd manager of the Phillies in 2013.

Sandberg's coaching decisions have been questioned over his one and a half seasons as the Phils' skipper. The pricey, aging roster has not given much for Sandberg to work with.

RYNE SANDBERG

Jim Curtin, Union

Seven years playing professionally and two seasons as an assistant was enough for the Union to take a risk on 35-year-old Curtin as head coach.

Curtin took the reins as interim head coach on June 10, 2014, after John Hackworth was relieved of his duties. Curtin proved himself worthy of the positioned after going 10-6-7 the rest of the season with the Union, knocking on the door of a playoff spot.

Curtin has a young Union team, eighth in the conference standings at 2-7-3. The team is coming off an impressive win over first-place D.C. United last Sunday by a score of 1-0.

Dave Hakstol, Flyers

On Monday, May 18, the latest rookie head coach, Hakstol, replaced former rookie Flyers' head coach, Berube.

Hakstol is taking his talents like Kelly did: from the college ranks to the professional level. The defense-enthusiast is leaving North Dakota after a very successful 11 seasons consisting of seven Frozen Four appearances.

MLB Power Rankings | by Ryan Hannable

No. 1

Cardinals (25-13)

St. Louis has dropped six of its last 10 games, but the Cards still have the best record in baseball and a plus-44 run differential, the second-best mark in the National League. They continue to have success without Adam Wainwright, who is lost for the year. Closer Trevor Rosenthal is tied for the most saves in the league with 13.

No. 2

Astros (25-14)

The Astros have the best record in the AL almost 40 games into the season. They are 13-10 at home and 12-4 on the road.

No. 3

Royals (24-14)

The Royals have two players in the top five in WAR in the AL in Lorenzo Cain, who leads the league at 2.8, and Mike Moustakas.

No. 4

Dodgers (24-13)

Adrian Gonzalez leads the offense, hitting .356 (second in the NL) with 32 RBIs (third in the NL).

No. 5

Tigers (23-16)

Jose Iglesias has the best average in the AL, batting .345, while Miguel Cabrera has 10 homers to go along with 30 RBIs.

No. 6

Mets (23-16)

Bartolo Colon and Matt Harvey have the most wins in the NL and closer Jeurys Familia is tied for the most saves with 13.

No. 7

Nationals (22-17)

The Nats hit a stride, winning three straight and eight of the last 10. Bryce Harper has 14 homers.

No. 8

Yankees (22-17)

Home runs have worked wonders for the Yanks as Mark Teixeira has 11 (second in the AL) and A-Rod has 10 (tied for third).

No. 9

Cubs (21-16)

The Cubs continue to surprise many in the baseball world, winning seven of their last 10. They are 3.5 games behind St. Louis.

No. 10

Twins (21-17)

Glen Perkins has 13 saves, tied for the most in the AL, and Torii Hunter leads the Twins in homers and RBIs.

No. 11

Rays (21-18)

Everyone is aware of their strong rotation, but 2b Logan Forsythe is pacing the offense, hitting .300 and driving in 17 runs.

No. 12

Giants (20-18)

After a disastrous start, the Giants continue to climb up the standings. Angel Pagan leads the team in hitting at .324.

No. 13

Angels (19-19)

The Angels are .500 and in second place in the AL West, but they are 5.5 games behind in the West.

No. 14

Padres (19-20)

San Diego has dropped three straight and six of 10 overall. Two big issues for the Padres are their pitching and defense.

No. 15

White Sox (11-9)

Don't look now, but the White Sox have won six games in a row and are 4.5 games out of first in the AL Central.
